Mrs. Eva Leonard's Story of Married Life on $80 a Month—Thanksgiving Day Dainties—To Select Squash for Pie—Latest Fashion Notes—Georgette Crepe Still a Favored Fabric for Blouses.

MARRIED LIFE ON $80 A MONTH

Mr. Sutner does not show appreciation of his wife's efforts to cut down expenses and Mrs. Sutner is discouraged but determines to try to win his approval.

"What you got here?" Mr. Sutner poked his fork into the dish in front of him, a frown on his face.

"It's a new dish I learned to make because I was told it was cheap," replied his wife.

"It has one good feature then," he said. "He helped himself sparingly to the contents of the tureen and sampled it with the air of an analytical chemist.

"How is it?" Mrs. Sutner was eagerly watching his face.

"Oh, it's as good as anything you make, and if it's cheaper, why let's have it again. Where is the butter?"

"We are out of butter, but this gravy is so good I thought we could get along without for one meal. I would be willing to go without a good many things to help straighten out our financial tangle."

Mr. Sutner put down his fork and stared at his wife.

"Isn't that a new development?"

"Don't nip it in the bud if it is, John," her face flushed angrily, but she shut her lips tight and said not another word.

Her husband finished his dinner in silence, rose from the table, kissed his four-year-old boy goodby, and was gone.

"Well, he ate a good dinner, and that is the test of cooking, anyway," she rose, putting her hand to her head. "I must lie down as soon as I can clear the table. My head is splitting."

"Come, Jack, dear, we will go and have a nice nap together," she darkened the room and slipped off her shoes. The wriggling little body finally became still and she slipped away from the heat and work into dreamland.

When she awoke she looked into a pair of laughing blue eyes, bending over her. She clasped the child in a tight embrace, exclaiming:

"Mother is so glad she's got you, dear heart."

Jack gave her a bear hug and then scurried off the bed.

Mrs. Spitzer put on his shoes and sent him out to play; then looked around the disordered kitchen.

"Now I'm rested, I'll begin on this mountain of dishes and have the house clean when John comes home. I've been so careless about it since I have felt so discouraged. There are two hours before supper time."

When her husband entered the house he noticed that everything was clean. His wife had on a freshly ironed dress, but he gave no sign of approval. He picked up the boy and played with him till called to supper.

Mrs. Sutner tried to start a conversation on several subjects, but was discouraged by his laconic answers and finally relapsed into silence.

When he rose from the table he said: "Get Jack to bed as soon as you can. I've got to have it still here. There's a set of books to be straightened."

"Jack slept till four this afternoon. I'm afraid he won't be sleepy early," began his wife.

"Asleep or awake, he's got to be still. I can't work in confusion. I'm too nervous, and we certainly need the little windfalls these extra jobs bring in."

Molly cleared the table and brought Jack's playthings into the kitchen to keep him quiet while she washed the dishes. Then she undressed him and lay down beside him to tell him stories to keep him quiet till he fell asleep.

THANKSGIVING DAY GOODIES.

The Thanksgiving pie, of course, means pumpkin pie. But if fresh or canned pumpkin is not obtainable, and pumpkin pie therefore out of the question, fortunately there are substitutes which resemble the genuine article so closely both in flavor and appearance, that your family will not know the difference unless you tell them. If you cannot obtain pumpkin, try a squash. Failing that, you can use carrots; or a sweet potato pie is excellent, though it does not taste as much like pumpkin pie as either of the others.

In selecting a squash for pie, choose one which cooks up smooth and fine. The best for the purpose has flesh of a rich orange color. The subard and kindred varieties are too dry and harsh to make smooth custard.

A pumpkin or squash occasionally will be found with a thin layer of bitter flesh next to the seed cavity. It is necessary, when this is the case, to cut or scrape away the bitter portion. If there is no bitterness, do not scrape the surface of the seed cavity any more than is needful to remove the coarse, spongy substance in which the seeds are imbedded.

IN THE FASHION WORLD. Cape collars are featured in some of the frocks.

Roses are used on many of the new evening frocks, sometimes in groups or strands, but usually a single and rather large rose is used some place on the bodice, often at the belt.

Sometimes the net of tulle with which the bodice of an evening frock is draped ends in a big sash bow at the back.

Patent leather belts are used with serge and gabardine frocks.

In many of the new frocks, the underskirt is shorter, by several inches than the overskirt, which is usually transparent. This is not a really new feature, as it was developed in some of last winter's frocks, but it is still worthy of attention.

Georgette crepe is still a favored fabric for blouses which in spite of the return of the princess model and the popularity of one-piece frocks, other designs, are bought and worn by fashionable women.

Ribbon is more and more used to trim frocks and blouses as the season advances. Loops of wide ribbon are used on some frocks at the sides of the skirts, to form a sort of cascade.

The apron idea is still followed out. An apron of silver lace appears on an evening gown of peach pink.

Silver gray, especially in velvet, is used for evening frocks and blouses.
